Online Training on Person-Centered Planning Now Available

The Division of Care and Treatment Services (DCTS) promotes Person-Centered Planning as an important component of the delivery of behavioral health supports, services, and treatment. Person-Centered Planning upholds the idea that the person, not the system or its limitations, is put first during every step of the care and treatment process. Person-Centered Planning is done with the people served, for the people served.

A free online training on Wisconsin's model for Person-Centered Planning is now available through the DHS website. This course is divided into three modules that cover the core components and standards of a person-centered planning approach. Practitioners are encouraged to complete this training. People receiving behavioral health supports, services, and treatment, as well as their family and friends may also complete this training. A certificate of completion is available for people who finish all three modules in order.

More free online trainings offering certificates of completion on other evidence-based practices will be available next year.
