PLANNING FOR 2018

Use Environmental Public Health Tracking data to help you get where you need to go!

Happy New Year! As you’re planning for your 2018 work, remember that Environmental Public Health Tracking data are great for everything from media stories to community health assessments to policy development.

We now host 13 data topics, with well over 100 different measures. In 2017—with help from our partners—we added data on Lyme disease, immunizations, historical precipitation, and oral health; there’s something for everybody! Watch for new data in the coming year, as we have a few new topics we’re planning to launch.

As always, let us know if you have questions or need assistance.

TRACKING IN ACTION

In each newsletter, we share a Tracking success story.

Including Lead Poisoning Testing Prompts in Electronic Medical Records

As a grantee of the Taking Action with Data grant program, Walworth County Department of Health and Human Services staff were able to study Medicaid provider lead poisoning testing rates in their county. They found many clinics were not testing children according to CDC recommendations. Read on...

What’s in Your Water? Private Well Water Quality Surveillance Brief Released
Nearly 4 in 10 Wisconsin homes use private wells for their water supply, and this surveillance brief covers the basics for what public health workers and well owners need to know.

Did You Check Out Your County Environmental Health Profile?
In case you missed it, we released our 2017 County Environmental Health Profiles in May. The profiles are a snapshot of the data we have available on our portal. Download yours today! The profiles will be updated again in 2019.

Get Ready for Warmer Weather
We know it’s January and freezing, but it’s a great time to get a jump start on planning your spring and summer messaging! Last year we created videos on heat safety and on Lyme disease prevention that are great for social media, health fairs and public events, and embedding on websites.
